

Zen Anarchy

Its Theology, Philosophy, Hypothesis, Paradigm or whatever you're having yourself explained in miscellaneous exegesis and laws

"A Triumph of Ingenuity over Plausibility"

Since the late 18th century Anarchy has had many heroes, such as William Godwin, Pierre-Joseph Proudhon and Peter Kropotkin, beacons of light, whose wisdom fell on stony ground. Worse was to follow when, in the mid-20th century, anarchism was conquered and colonised by communism.

This has been a philosophical and political disaster as anarchy is now treated as some minor adjunct to the main totalitarian agenda; a complete antithesis of the fundamental principles and vision of anarchism. Furthermore, no self-respecting anarchist will have anything to do with communism or its commie-lite allies since the Spanish Civil War.

But that is history and it's time to move on – though, history would have been very much different if people had moved on after the crucifixion of one Jesus of Nazareth.

But to move on, in these days of (insert pizza order here)-globalisation when capitalism and communism have both failed (have they ever been tried?) a beacon of shining light illuminates a pathless way in the fog of existential confusion that threatens to envelop us all – All hail Zen Anarchy!

An Exegesis on Murphy's Law∞

Once upon a time (whatever that is) there was a universe, or so it was believed. Now we have a Multiverse.

Though much of what passes for scientific theories of <sup>E</sup>verything is akin to Schrodinger's Cat strangely charming a mouse, a.k.a. Heisenberg's Uncertainty Principle, outside a black mouse hole with a disCERNment (think Tom, Jerry & Tyke). Others have updated the old saw of 'How long is a piece of string?' to 'How many dimensions are there in a string theory?'

Such theories are overly simplistic, in fact there are multiverses. The collective noun is INFI (∞∞). Just follow a couple of parallel lines to the end to see what it looks like; bring a picnic.

It stands to reason that this is the case because of a core INFIversal law, Murphy's Law, viz. If something can go wrong it will go wrong. An infinite number of universes are needed for everything that can go wrong, to go wrong.

It follows that on only one universe everything will go right (whatever that is), which is all very well, but, you may ask, how will anyone know? How many thrilling instalments are there? However, since it will take an infinite amount of time for <sup>E</sup>verything to happen there is no need to worry about universe redundancy off-switches.

It can also be argued that because in  $\infty^{\infty-1}$  universes at least one thing is going wrong, you're wasting your time trying to do anything right, since, for all we know, it might be the universe where an infinite number of typewriter monkeys are composing the complete works of Shakespeare on e-bananas.

To further understand the implications, in life we have choices and therefore there is an ever-branching stream of universes to cater for all the choices we might have made (multiplied by the number of people who have lived, are now living, or yet to be born; minus the number of shared universes).

To those who say that is an awful lot of universes, the simple answer is there's no point in having an infinity if you don't use it.

And what is the point of all this?

Consider the Theology of Heaven

All heavens, according to various planetary religious texts, have one thing in common; viz. Nothing goes wrong.

Hells are different: Wrong is the New Right.

But a question that arises is whether each universe has its own Heaven and Hell that judges you on one specific life, leading to an infinite number of Heavens and Hells or is there an over-arching Afterlife that judges you on the totality of existences.

If it is the latter then, because an individual will die at different times in different universes, the early varieties will have to be parked somewhere (Limbo) to await the arrival of the later ones. There could be quite a wait if, in one life, you discover immortality.

Reincarnation and transmigration doesn't change the picture in the tres longue durée. It just prolongs the agony and makes Judgment a whole lot more complicated.

Limbo is a handy chill-out for God and his crony angels when they want a private game of poker away from the heavenly paparazzi. It's a little known fact that Lucifer ended up in his current location when he went all-in with four Aces against God's pair of twos and lost; God, luckily (ahem), was dealt three twos.

Lucifer's mates afterwards complained of a fix and pointed to the fact that he was leader of the space-time curvature event horizon surfing league, well ahead of Archangel Mike, sponsored by God. No prizes for guessing what happened to them.

"But where", you ask "are all these places?" since to have Heaven, Hell and Limbo outside of  $\infty^{\infty}$  is a major contradiction. Then again having them inside is also contradictory due to the universal ubiquity of Murphy's Law. Or maybe you're religious when it's just another boring irrelevant mystery.

One possibility is that religions are wrong; there are no separate places, just other universes that fulfil the conditions of what one expects or where one is sent, regardless of the plumbing or wiring, the first things that always go wrong in any accommodation.

Another answer is that their hidden in Dark Matter, which comprises about 85% of the total amount of universal matter, in one word: BIG. However Dark Matter is mostly made up of sub-atomic particles, which act as quantum Zip files.

How many devils can dance on a quantum of dark energy?

We cannot assume that Dark Matter is all the one entity so future research should focus on the different types to establish the amount of space given to the three, the burning question being which is bigger, Heaven or Hell?

The way forward is to study Dark Energy, 85% of the universe's total content, which is a strange melange of energy produced by the choirs of Heaven, the wailing and gnashing of teeth from Hell and the dysfunctional cacophony, combined with the subtle sounds of poker chips, from Limbo but minus Black Hole and Cosmic anti-Flatulence.

However, this state affairs will not last forever (whatever that is) as in some future time the mass of Dark Energy will hit a tipping point, due to the exponential transfer of lives from Light to Dark Matter causing it to become top-heavy, which will cause  $\infty^\infty$  to explode with a Big Bang and disappear down a Black-is-the-new-White Hole, Ouroboros style, in one durationless infinite instant leaving nothing behind but a fading grin.

This is called the Big Cheshire Cat Bang theory (after Schrodinger's Cat that may or may not be buried in Cheshire).

We'll have to wait and see whether it will lead to Judgment Day or Groundhog Day.

An Exegesis on God's Gender

God is male. The proof is simple.

Cosmic dust is found in all parts of the universe, this is typically male: dust and dirt everywhere; in other words, God is a slob.

If God was female the universe would be regularly tidied and scrubbed with bleach guaranteed to kill 99% of all life forms and thus be neatly organized, sparkling clean, shiny and smell faintly of lemon-scented freshener.

Q.E.D.

Consider the pollution; about 40,000 tons of dust falls on earth every year. Most comes from the Asteroid Belt and has been around for eons after some cosmological corporate bash that God has never bothered to clean up. As for the Oort Cloud; let's not go there.

To be fair, God has tried to keep the universe clean by installing Black Holes as vacuum cleaners (a lit quasar means it's on) but he made a mess of that, mixing up black and white holes. The dust is spewed out every which-way making the problem worse by creating stars and galaxies that keep collapsing leaving behind mucky unsightly nebulas.

Apologists claim that this dust, because the grains contain organic molecules, kick-started the creation of life on this planet and probably on others.

No doubt in a bar somewhere in the universe a life form is glumly 'looking' into his entheogen thinking "I could have been a star".

Leaving aside the dubious hypothesis that life is a Good Thing, it shows that it happened accidentally; if God had wanted to create life he would have done so directly.

If blowing up novae and the occasional supernova is God's sole amusement, then he doesn't have much of a life and needs a good woman to look after him. Or maybe she's distracting him with bangs and flashes while she gets on with important stuff.

Unless of course, if he's a child god with his first universe kit in which case he needs a clatter from his mammy to teach him some sense. It can't be a girl otherwise the universe would be lurid pink with dolls' houses inhabited by kittens and bunnies with big eyes instead of planets and ruled wisely by Barbie God and Ken God, that's obvious.

An Exegesis on the Law of Arseways

Note that the infinity of things that can go wrong doesn't necessarily include those that go arseways': the law states 'If something can go right or wrong it can go arseways'.

There are three potential outcomes from any action following the Way of Arse

- a. It will be a completely new Right Way. This is usually incorrectly put down to some mundane flash of inspiration or serendipity
- b. It will be a completely new Wrong Way. This is usually incorrectly put down to you being an idiot, though, of course, one does not necessarily preclude the other
- c. Nothing: Transcendental Zen Anarchy

Verily, I tell thee, brethren, sisthren and LGBTQIP2SAthren, follow the exemplar set by our glorious founder, myself, who hath proclaimed:

"I am attracted to doing things arseways like a moth is to a candle flame"

But do you really want to be listening to a person variant that has never apologised to Frank Sinatra for

I've lived a life that's half full or empty
I travelled each and every multiverse
And more, much more than this
I did it Arseways

An Exegesis on Pessimism and Optimism

A pessimist says "If something can go wrong, it will go wrong"

An optimist says "If something can go right, it will go right"

Both assume that there is a relationship between an action and the result of the action, that there is cause and effect; i.e. is what you get, a result of what you do?

An Exegesis on Language

It is argued that the prefixes and suffixes of words can be gender discriminatory. So History becomes Herstory (Hertory if you want to be pedantic); but there are other words that also need to be reformed such as hysteria, why not hersteria? Hysterectomy is, of course, now there's a queer one and should definitely be hersterectomy.

It could be argued that hys- is not gender-specific; however, it is the pronunciation that gives the meaning not the spelling. The argument is only valid when it is both spelled and pronounced differently; an example is hymen, though for obvious biological reasons this should be hywimmin.

In Christian churches wimmin sing hers

Another word is person, which could just as easily be perdaughter but, given the general tenor of the meaning, peroffspring is most appropriate since everyone is an offspring regardless of gender. The fact that this is in keeping with the overall meaning forestalls arguments that 'off' discriminates against 'on' and 'spring' against its antonyms.

Following on, chairperson becomes chairperoffspring, though this can lead to discrimination against other objects that can be sat on, such as stools, cushions, toadstools, etc.

It's not over till the fat lady sings: fat is weightist, lady is sexist and sings discriminates against those that can't. To correct this is a literary minefield; so an alternative could be 'It's not over till the fat parrot has got sick'. (Declaration of interest: Some of my best friends are parrots)

A major unsolved puzzle is how to be linguistically correct with non-male/female genders, i.e. instead of his/herstory: LGBTQQIP2SAatory for those genders. Note that that last A has been omitted since an ally is not a gender. However if it defines community rather than gender then it is still omitted since allies are usually of male or female persuasion.

The term Two Spirit does not reflect the cultures of all pre-17th century peoples of the northern section of the land mass that roughly lies between 18°S to 85°N and 35° to 165°W; some clans (Apache, Comanche) had no such use. Nor is it clear why this geographical region and not others are included in the LGBTetc classification, though the area is known for its imperialism.

To be all-inclusive once could use LGBTQQIP2SAAENPtory where A is allies, E enemies, N neutrals and P postgenderists. Alternatively, rather than make value judgements as to attitudes and perceptions that can change within a lifetime, one could use F and M instead.

But in what order? The simplest would be alphabetical. viz. ABFGILMPPQQT2Story or 2STQQPPMLIGFBAatory if one counters the discrimination suffered by those whose first letter comes from the latter end of the alphabet. However, this only works with English and may discriminate against other alphabets and scripts as cultural colonialism.

Meanings are also problematic as terms such as fa'afafine, fakaleiti, hijra, kathoey, machi, mahu, pinapinnaine, sadhin and travesty, to name a few, are not directly translatable into English. All translations are interpretations and reflect the cultural biases and world views of the translators.

It may be simpler to stick with 'history'.

However the most serious issue of all is:

Why is it always Dad-dancing but never Mum-dancing?

An Exegesis on Women's' Ages

A well known saying is "That any woman who says her age is either a liar or a fool". It therefore follows that any man who, when asked to guess a woman's age, does not lie, is a fool.

An Exegesis on Inflation

It's a little known fact that current rampant inflation has also affected many aspects of life other than money and women's ages.

Fairy stories now begin, "Twice upon a time..."

In Ireland the craic is now only 90.

It is no longer possible to be at One with the Universe, nowadays only to be at Two with the Universe is achievable (1.99 on religious holidays).

An Exegesis on Muppets

Consider the grand questions of existence and compare them to the realities of this universe.

The so-called march of civilisation has all the grace and artistry of a herd of stoned stampeding elephants who have snorted chilli.

The vast majority of people are engaged in subsistence livelihoods but in the wealthier parts of the world the majority are employed in jobs that are of little benefit to them and none to the planet. In other words they are muppets.

Being a muppet is no barrier to advancement, promotion and power in business, politics and religion, which leads to societies of muppets ruled by muppets; its muppets all the way up.

May you have interesting employment.

An Exegesis on Ignorance

An extract from Ignorance is Bliss for Dummies

Q. Who created you?

A. God

Q. Who created your brain?

A. God

Q. Why did God give you a brain?

A. Er...

Q. Which of the following is correct? a) God gave me a brain to think b) My brain will explode if I think c) I must believe everything I'm told without question

A. Duh...

Q. Were you planning, when you die, to tell God: "Here's my brain back, it's as good as new, I didn't use it; it can be given to somebody else"?

A. Um...

Q. How will God react?
